

Seattle Pacific University
WRITING PROGRAM

Waiver to Use Student Writing in WRI 1000 and WRI 1100
and for Faculty Development

Student writing plays a key part in Seattle Pacific University's Writing Program. In the classroom, your essays are invaluable for teaching students to be readers of their own work. For faculty development, your writing is invaluable for working through the pedagogical issues that arise in teaching writing.

This waiver lets faculty know your preference concerning the use of the writing you produce in WRI 1000 and WRI 1100. If your work is ever shared—either in future sections of WRI 1000 and WRI 1100, or in faculty development seminars—it will be shared anonymously. It will not be posted on-line or distributed beyond the bounds of WRI 1000, WRI 1100, or development.

Please check one of the following boxes. And please know that whatever you decide concerning the use of your work has no bearing on your grade.

Yes, the SPU Writing Program has my permission to use the writing I produce in WRI 1000 and 1100 for future sections of the course and for faculty development. My work, if used, will be shared anonymously.

No, the SPU Writing Program does not have permission to use the writing I produce in WRI 1000 and 1100.
